GHSP Breaks Ground for New Facility in Shanghai

(Shanghai, China) — When completed, the new plant in the Jiading District of Shanghai will have 6500 square meters for Assembly, Molding, Test Lab, Engineering and Offices. The building is being constructed to meet GHSP's needs and will be owned by Shanghai Shenlu Jun Zhi Ji Co., Ltd.

GHSP is a leading global supplier of shift systems for passenger vehicles that use automatic transmissions. Shift systems are produced in China, Mexico and the US (Michigan).

GHSP's parent company, JSJ, has been operating in China since 1987. GHSP has been in China since 2000. Its first plant opened in the Jiading District in 2005 with two shifter customers. The second plant opened in the Qingpu District in 2007. A complete test lab was added in 2008. GHSP now serves seven customers, four are global automakers and three are Chinese automakers. In addition to the expansion in Jiading, GHSP also plans to add space in the Qingpu District later this year.

GHSP is a leading supplier of shift-by-wire shifters to customers around the world with over 1 million of these shifters in vehicles. Since 2010 GHSP has been producing these sophisticated shifters for two customers in China. Learn more by clicking here.

In addition to assembling shifters, the company molds both decorative and structural plastic components. GHSP also produces plastic and leather shift knobs in China.

The ground-breaking ceremony was held at 8:18 am on 28 June. The ceremony was concluded with by lighting firecrackers to bring good wishes for the new plant. In conjunction with the ground-breaking ceremony GHSP launched the Chinese language version of its website, visit website by clicking here.
